

3 Secrets to the Independent Planners Peace of Mind (Meeting Planning Book 1)

You are on your own, and you feel good about it. You've decided to operate a home-based business office since you can pack all the home technology you need into a room the size of your den. You may not be getting all the business you'd like to, but that has its benefits as well. You get to spend more time with your family, and you get to reflect on your career and life. You have no commute, and increasingly you find that there is no stigma attached to those who operate home-based business offices. Actually, you are part of a massive trend--growth in the number of home-based businesses is a national phenomenon. Surveys indicate that more than 35,000,000 Americans now perform some or all of their work from their homes. In many ways, we're about to witness the most profound changes in business since the post-World War II period.
