

Biographical Memoirs of Extraordinary Painters: By the Author of Vathek (Classic Reprint)

Hemmelinck was tempted to take up some of them, and sitting down began to examine them with attention. He had not long contemplated them, before he broke out into exclamations of surprise, and inquired hastily for their author. The father, who was writing at his desk by the fire side, paid little attention to his friends enthusiasm, and it was not till Hemmelinck had pulled him three times by the sleeve that he cared to give any answer. Being of a very phlegmatic disposition, he replied coolly, that they were his sons scratches, and that he believed he would ruin him in paper were he to live much longer in such an idle way.
