

Buddhist Mahayana Texts, Vol. 49 (Classic Reprint)

The following computer-generated description may contain errors and does not represent the quality of the book. The Sanskrit text of the Buddha-zarita was published at the beginning of last year in the Anecdota Oxoniensia, and the following English translation is now included in the series of Sacred Books of the East. It is an early Sanskrit poem written in India on the legendary history of Buddha, and therefore contains much that is of interest for the history of Buddhism, beside its special importance as illustrating the early history of classical Sanskrit literature. It is ascribed to A. yvaghosha; and, although there were several writers who bore that name, it seems most probable that our author was the contemporary and spiritual adviser of Kanishka in the first century of our era. Hiouen Thsang, who left India in A.D. 645, mentions him with Deva, Nagarna, and Kumaralabdha, as the four suns which illumine the world; but our fullest account is given by I-tsing, who visited India in 673. He states that A. fvaghosha was an ancient author who composed the Ala; kara-i-astra and the Buddha- arita-kavya, the latter work being of course the present poem. Beside these two works he also composed the hymns in honour of Buddha and the three holy beings Amitabha, Avalokitej-vara, and Mahasthama, which were chanted at the evening service of the monasteries. In the five countries of India and in the countries of the Southern ocean they recite these poems, because they express a store of ideas and meaning in a few words. A solitary stanza (Viii, 13) is Julicn sTranslation, vol. ii, p.214. See M. Fujishama, Journal Asiatique, iS 88, p.425. This book is a reproduction of an important historical work.
