Excerpt: ... able from our united endeavours to communicate something now and then. The publication of our Proceedings hitherto, when it appears, will help us all in recollection of other similar things, and open inquiries that are not yet thought of. That horrid way of modernizing old stately buildings was always my aversion. Hampton Court, in its original dress, cannot fail of shewing the opulence of the Founder, as well as the curious taste in the architecture of his time. This new-fangled fashionable way of building, however airy, light, and gaudy, determines nothing of solidity, grandeur, or dignity, equal to those antient remains, few, too few indeed, and, under a constant demolition, all likely to have no traces, but from those which with great commendation are preserved by the Societys Prints. There is going on a Map of the County of Essex, by Sparrow, of Hammersmith. I know him well; he is an excellent hand. I believe it will well accompany Mr. Morants History; and t have had some late reasons to think (from things he has done here) that it will be very elegant and exact. I am, dear Sir, with our compliments to yourself and Lady, Your very obliged and ever obedient servant, R. Lumley Kingston.<sup>1</sup> Letters of Smart Lethieullier , Esq. To the Rev. Fbancis WisEf, of Trinity College, Oxford. Sir, Bond-street, April 19, 1731. In some letters I had the pleasure to receive from you many years ago, in relation to our English Coins, you sent me the draught of one which you have in your cabinet, in copper, with the figure of a man kneeling on one side, and standing on the other; the workmanship extremely rude, and your opinion was that it was British. I am now able to give you a better account of that Coin, having one fallen lately into my hands, which, upon ...
