

In Tinas Shadow: The true story of a murder, a husbands guilt and a familys 14-year vigil for justice

In 1995, Tina Sandoval was a sharp young college graduate who had just landed her dream job as a nurse. She had a new apartment, lots of friends and a loving family all the makings of a promising future. One lingering problem plagued her like the cancer she was helping treat at the hospital her husband, John Sandoval, who called himself The Shadow, stalking and following women almost nightly for years. Her divorce couldnt come fast enough. A final meeting with him to settle an IRS debt would be the last time anyone would see Tina. Police knew he killed her. But they had nothing no crime scene, no confession and no body. They didnt know how he did it, and he would never confess or talk, but a team of prosecutors and investigators set out fourteen years later to prove the only possible cause of her disappearance was murder.
